THE THEATER.

New National Theater.

"Mother Goose" is a gorgeous plenitude. As a comic entertainment it consists of Joe Cawthorne and one or two others entirely days of the Black Crook, who are continualsented amid scenes of revelry and splendor devise and only the modern theatrical manager can pay for. There are flying fairies and a corps de ballet, which includes all types of stage beauty, from albino to brunette, and all ages from the mature coryphee, with whom dancing is a profession and a consideration apart from youth and comeliness down to the wee mite of humanity, who is too small to talk even if most noted creameries can always be had at this establishment. "Four Leaf Clover" tumes are beautiful and the management tumes are beautiful and the management of the maze of scenery is one of the marvels of the playhouse. The performance last night proceeded without a hitch. Perhaps smoothness which familiarity gives. "Mother Goose" is described as a Drury Lane spectacle, but the trail of the American adapter is over it. Here and there, a bit of rhymed dialogue turns up as a re-minder of its origin, but if there were ever any original melodies worth noticing in the production they have, in accordance with the custom which subordinates everything to spectacular effect, been entirely effaced. The company's orchestra leader can scarcely be blamed, from a musical point of view, for racing through some of them as rapidly as possible, but his dash for the measure is likely to be disquieting to a singer who may be trailing in his wake. Joe Cawthorne has a genuinely funny song, and a lof of humorous chatter, in which the letter "r" rolls good-naturedly along side by side with a great deal of genuine humor of the broader sort. Mr. Cawthorne is one of the few people who can proceed with lengthy discourse in a performance of this kind without inviting a suspicion that he is merely killing time while the stage hands set the grand transformation scene. just out of view behind him. W. H. Macart and Henry Kelly each do a liberal share of entertaining, and the goose itself, impersonated by Walter Stanton, has no small share of cimic responsibility. The scenic features include the flying bal-let which introduces some new effects. Among them an aerial journey of one of its members above the heads of the audience the "hall of gold," the "palace of fantasy, in which various phases of art, including decorative pottery and typified with feminine assistance; the "mountain of fire and the land of frost and ice" and the "land of heartsease," in which floral embellishments predominate. It is in this last named scene that the flying ballet performs.

"Mother Goose" is an attraction peculiarly appropriate to the holiday season, when nursery folk are supposed to dominate their elders in everything, including dramatic taste.

Columbia Theater. To the personality of Chauncey Olcott and his singing of Irish songs, the audience that witnessed the performance of "Terence," at the Columbia Theater last evening owed their principal enjoyment. This actor's name is linked with numerous past successes in romantic plays that have drawn upon Ireland for their scenes and incidents. The audience at the Columbia last night seemed satisfied to see Mr. Olcott in a play that affords him opportunity to display his pleasing brogue and sweet tenor voice, and also permits him to pet the children, make love to a pretty girl and, incidentally, to administer physical punishment to the villain. Mr. Olcott composes his own sorgs. The play is a dramatization from a ovel by Mrs. B. M. Crocker, made by Mrs. Edmund N. Morgan, and in some portions it has a tendency to the melodramatic, while the dialogue frequently relapses into 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Near K the commonplace. It would take at least street the runaway team collided with a all of one man's time and most careful attention to live up to the reputation spoken for Terence by his associate players at the very outset of the piece. Terence has set the whole countryside ringing with his praises. He is the last of an old Irish famlly, and has been cheated out of his vast hereditary estates by the machinations of a shrewd lawyer. In the guise and occupa-tion of a coachman he returns from his wanderings to his native county, and sets himself to win back his lands. The secret, it appears, is too good to keep, for from the first act practically everybody concern ed, with the exception of the shrewd lawyer and the young lady deeply interested in Terence, knows that the coachman is "the last of the Desmonds," and there is no doubt in the mind of the auditors as to the final happy outcome.

Mr. Olcott's performance was characteristic, and he made all of his part that was possible. Miss Marguerite Hayden was an attractive heroine, and Mat B. Snyder did some good work as the old bodyguard of Terence. An interesting feature of the per-formance was the work of John Gough and Blanche Alexander, the "little sweet-hearts," who proved to be clever little Lafayette Theater.

A large audience greeted "David Harum" at the Lafayette Theater last evening, when he made his annual bow and introduced to his friends the characters who go to make up the pastoral play known by his name. William H. Turner as David Harum has been pronounced good, and his associates are no less worthy of commendation. John Lennon, the hero, a part played last night by James W. Ashley, affords opportunity for the display of much histrionic ability, but Mr. Ashlev's particular style of acting would be better suited to a more melodramatic part. The scenery was good, being familiar to those who have seen the play before here, and the introduction of a horse, although not a novelty, pleased the audience.

Especially well-played parts were those of General Wolsey, the guardian of Mary Blake, played by W. D. Chaffin; Mary Blake, by Margurite Urquhart; Aunt Polli Bixbee, by Effle Germon; Widow Cullom, by Mary B. Henderson; Chet Timson, the country bank clerk, by William Robert Daly, and Dick Larribee, by C. H. Carlton.

Chase's.

A choice bit of Shakespeare sandwiched between a modern farce and an Irish monologue might offend those delicate natured disciples of the bard who see everywhere evidences of the decadence of the "drama," but it furnishes at Chase's this week an excellent illustration of the spirit of this age where the man who pays his money has an infinite variety to choose from. It was a far cry from Bradshaw and Company in "Fix in a Fix" to Odette Tyler and Company in "King John," but the two audiences that witnessed the flight vesterday afternoon and evening did not seem disturbed. Indeed the introduction of Shakespeare to a vaudeville audience in the form of a specially selected act from one of the greatest plays was well received and its in-terpretation by Miss Tyler and her assistants was heartily applauded. The success of the scheme of presenting twenty minutes of classic drama to the crowd surfeited with monologues, songs and dances, seems assured. The bit selected for the first per formance here was the scene between Hubert and young Prince Arthur. The action that takes place before the scene presented that takes place before the scene presented in full, is very prettily explained in a prologue written by Cecil Kingstone and spoken by Jessie Shirley. Miss Tyler as Prince Arthur was all that could be expected. Her experience in the field of Shakespearian drama has been extensive and her work gave evidence of careful preparation. George D. McQuarrie was cast as Hubert, and William Cole and Samuel Turner also appeared in the piece. Chase's menu this week contains such a variety that the most exacting ought to find some thing to please. The bill includes Charmion his rubber balls, the musical Avolos, the Boises in their trapeze act and the vitograph. Union College Graduates Enjoy Feast

Mr. Thomas E. Shea may be considered one of the annual institutions of the Academy of Music, and there has never been surrounded by scenery. The piece has a any doubt as to his popularity with the bit of a story, too, about a good fairy and patrons of that playhouse. Last night he a sulphurous personage, reminiscent of the was seen for the first time under the management of Nixon & Zimmerman, in "Bansuch as only the modern stage manager can history of the court of France, and naturally abounds with love and intrigue, sword play and gallantry. Mr. Shea as Capt. Henri Lagadare, the banished gal-He was the exponent of the bygone type of swashbuckler, with a restless sword and a generous heart, quick to resent an affront and quicker to extend help and succor to the weak and oppressed.

The plot of the play, which may be more readily recognized by old-time theatergoers under the title of "The Duke's Motto," is well sustained. Captain Lagadare, after his banishment, is on his way to the French frontier, but stops to have a final passage at arms with his old foe, Count de Nevers. Finding the latter beset by his enemies, he it is worth waiting to see a production of changes from foe to friend, and the comthis kind till the costumes lose a little of plications that ensue sustain interest until the death of the arch conspirator, the Duke Gonzagu, and the otherwise happy termination of the play.

Spencer Charters, in the role of the Duke Gonzagu, was excellent, and J. Irving Southard as Count Peyrolles, Robert Lee as Paspoplay, James J. Cassidy as Cocardy, Alice Windress as Blance De Caylos, Charlotte Burkett as Blance De Nevers and Emma Salisbury Southard as the Gypsy Queen are worthy of special mention. The remainder of the cast was efficient. The scenic settings were unusually good the costumes were appropriate and beau-

FIREMEN'S COFFEE FUND. Contribution of $20 Received by Com-

conse rund. In addition to everything eise it is considered a safeguard to the firemen from the temptation to take liquor when chilled by the cold and perhaps drenched with water at fires, especially at night. The fund is carefully husbanded, being used only when there is evident necessity for it. It is not a public fund, and depends antirely upon the contributions of various
